1. Location: See sketch.
2. Cantonment for German engineers:

Seventy to eighty engineers with their dependents, a total of about 200, arrived in Novogorsk in the Fall of 1946. Local residents said that the engineers had come from the Zeiss Plant in Jena. Soviet foreman [] said that the engineers and their dependents were transferred to Krasnogorsk in the fall of 1947. About 100 German engineers without dependents arrived in the fall of 1947. They have been quartered in the cantonment since that time. Every day at 9 a.m. they were taken by bus to a small plant about 400 meters north of the Metrosockel underground railroad station, east of the Leningrad Chaussee. They were returned by bus in the evening. No details available.

Comment:

- a. The information on the Zeiss experts who were transferred to the well-known optical plant near Krasnogorsk after a temporary stay in Kovogorsk is considered correct.
- b. Other information in report cannot be commented on because it is too vague. The underground railway station mentioned is perhaps the Sokolniki metropolitan railway station in the northeastern section of Moscow.

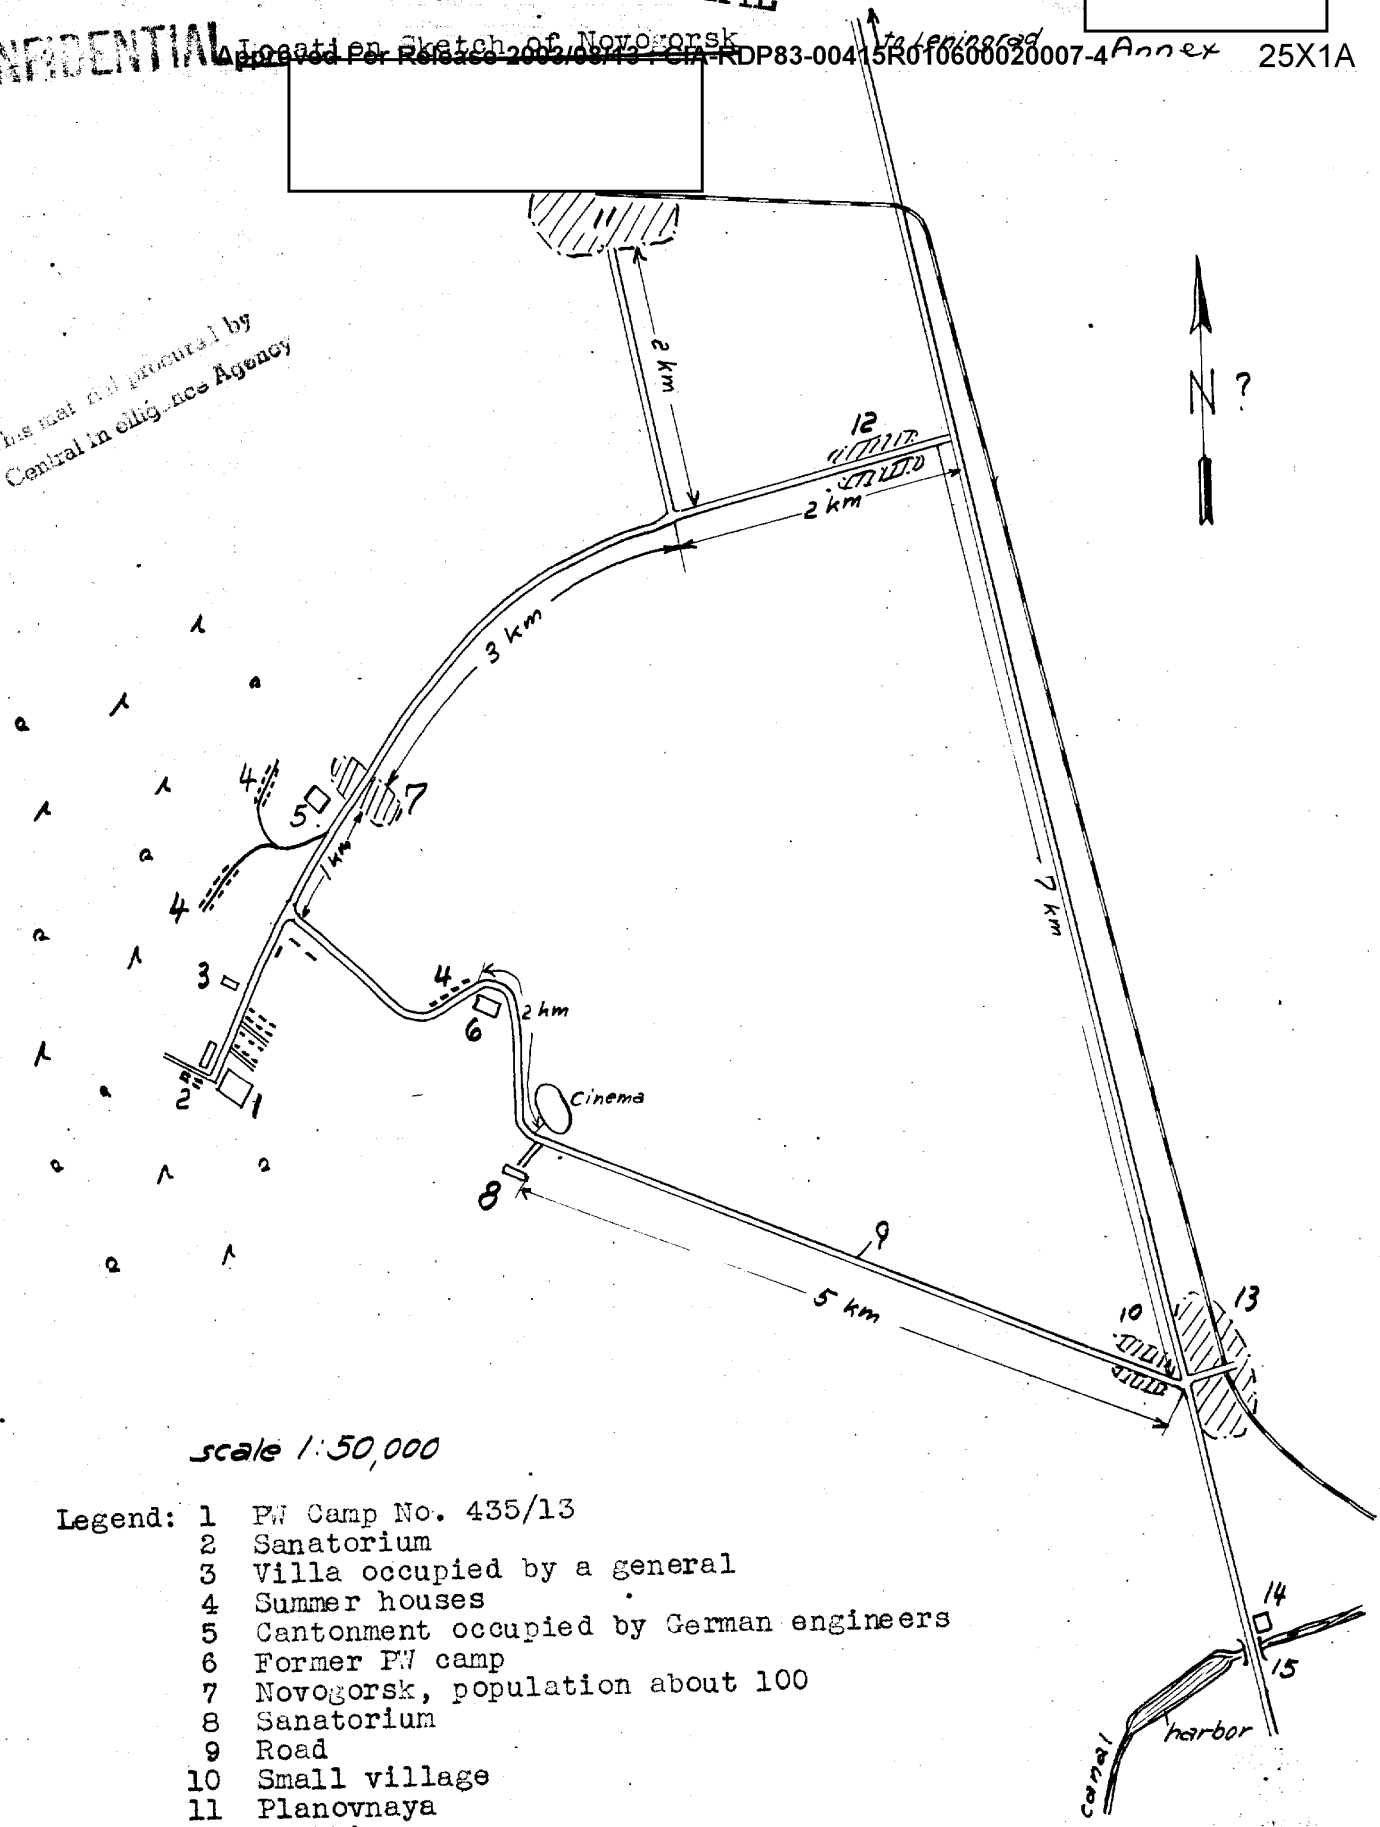

- 1 Annex: Blueprint, location sketch of Novogorsk.
